Author Says Americans Can Solve Economic Problems by “Growing Up” and Acting Like Adults

WEST PALM BEACH, FL — Americans fear the onset of a recession as the housing market continues its decline and the stock market fluctuates. Since last fall, the number one issue in the minds of voters during this election year is the economy, outweighing the war in Iraq. Presidential candidates now have to walk down Wall Street in order to get to the White House.

The reason we find ourselves in this economic mess, according to author Sid Dinerstein, is not the inability but the unwillingness to balance the federal budget. We keep passing this escalating debt forward to future generations.

“The fiscal can that we’re kicking down the road is going to hit a bump, come up and smack us in the head,” Dinerstein proclaims. “You cannot have a 9 trillion dollar debt, unfunded entitlements in the 20-30 trillion dollar range and expect a happy ending.”

In his new book, “Adults Only: For People Who Love Their Country More Than Their Party,” Dinerstein says we need to grow up, act like adults and solve our economic problems. “We know we can fix it,” he says. “We need to make sure that our government grows up before our grandchildren do.”

The economy is one of a dozen topics Dinerstein discusses in his book. The chairman of the Palm Beach County Republican Executive Committee takes a non-partisan look at what America needs in order for us to solve the problems we face in the 21st century, get our nation back on track, and regain the respect and admiration internationally as a world leader.
